

With effortless organization, no one should lose a college application-worthy accomplishment to lack of motivation.

Fleeting thoughts ought to be recorded and give the potential for inclusion in an author's blog.

If we find a fun and rewarding motive, people will be encouraged to regularly pursue their creative outlets, resulting in greater happiness and satisfaction with life.

Library books are valuable, yet underutilized.

There are plenty of people who own specialized outdoors equipment, but they only use it intermittently. On the other hand, there are people who want to try a new activity like camping or surfing, but aren't willing to buy equipment, they'd rather rent it.

You are your own best cheerleader.

While interactions are extremely important in a group meeting, the exchange of ideas can be inefficient because excessive Q&A can block the entire workflow.

Caffeine can boost productivity by consuming the right amount, but it can cause health-related issues when overly consumed.

People often use workarounds for issues that have easy to use and already implemented solutions. The problem is that people often don't know about the existence of such solutions.

Extensive course related logistics are unavoidable, but feeling disorganized, unmotivated, and unproductive aren't.

People want to do good deeds, but life gets in the way.

Life moves fast, and one's time and memory is precious. Is it possible to filter the important stuff?

Sleep is hard to fix with an alarm. Track it, compare it, be inspired by it. Stop snoozing, start sleeping.

Social anxiety is caused by a fear of rejection and judgement by others. However, providing different levels of anonymity throughout the social interactions can make the process easier and can allow for lasting friendships.